NINGPO.

(N. C. Daily News.) In the year 1863 an appeal was made by Bishop Alford, at that time Bishop of Victoria, Hongkong, to the English Episcopal congregations in Ningpo, Shanghai, Hankow, Kinkiang, Honekong, and Canton, on behalf of a Church Building Fund in connection with the O. M. S.

The Bishop visited the chief outstation of the Society in that province; namely the walled town of Kwan-hal-wei, sit nated in the populous plain of Ean-po, and distant by land just thirty miles from the port of Ningpo. 36 Chinese Christians were confirmed on that, occasion, and the small Mission Church was growded to excess. From the impression left on his mind by this visit, as to the prosperity of the Mission on the one hand, and as to the justequary of the accommodation on the other, the Bishop was led to appeal for funds toward the erection that ship, with refusal of duty on the 2nd July, of a suitable Mission Church. About $1,500 were contributed, and this sum having been supplemented by a grant from the O.M.S., the Church, after some delay (the ground baving been raised and levelled menuwhile by the voluntary labour of the Christians) was commenced in September, 1872, and finished in > February of the present year. The Church accommodates about 200 per sone. It has a nave, and side misles with clarestory; but is not conspicuously foreign in uppearance. (Saturday Review.) had been clouded. The suspicion which had been very needlessly entertained that the sugments as can be shown to be real improvements bill. And it is especially satisfactory to hear schedules of documents most require the safefrom the Attorney-General that Mr. Gladstone guard of cross-examination, and this ought to and Mr. Lowe are satisfied that this is not a matter on which they should higgle about money, and that if the thing is worth doing, it is worth paying for to do it well. Of course this does not mean, and ought not to mean, reckless expenditure; but it must mean that the new Court is to be constituted with a view To the utmost possible efficiency, and not merethat can be got at the price now paid.

After such assurances there was no room for opposition, and the Bill was read a second time with cordial unanimity. The surbordinate question, whether the important amendments which are promised shall be settled in Select Committee or in Committee of the whole House. turged merely on sonsiderations of convenience There is much work to be done, and we are not quite sure that it would not be done more rapidly over a Committee Room table than on the floor of the House. There is weight, however, in Mr. Watkin Williams's observation, that it would be very difficult to get the lawyers together in the morning, and in the present temper of the House we may fairly count upon a full discussion of the clauses when the House gets into Committee. It is a great point gained to have nearly all questions of principle absolutely concluded. The Attorney-General not only conceded, but welcomed with genuine enthusiasm, the proposal that the Common Law Divisions should be strengthened from the outset with an infusion of Equity trained colleagues, and he was able to convey the mesurance that this was desired by none more keenly than by the Common Law Judges

On the constitution of the Court of Appeal the assurances of the Attorney-General were equally satisfactory. The permanent staff is to include three Equity Judges in addition to the Lords Justices. This will make a well-balanced Court, though it may be doubted whether they will find time to get through their work without splitting themselves into inconveniently small divisions. The question of the amount of strength which what be allotted to the Chancery Division to make it capable of dealing efficiently with the work assigned to it, has not yet been fully discussed; but no one impugned the broad principle insisted on by Mr. Fowler, that such strength should be given as to ensure the introduction of viva voce evidence, to save the jury box from being once more consigned to the lumber-room, and to get rid of the scandal of delegating Judges' work to Chief Clerks in Equity and to Registrars in Bankruptcy. Amendments with these objects ought to be and no doubt will be, jealously watched to guard against excess; but we may assume after what has passed that whatever is clearly shown to be essential to efficiency will be granted without demur.

One very important matter—that of proocdare-will require a good deal of careful and rather minute attention. On this topic also the which every one, we think, will subscribe to. He referred, as the Lord Chancellor had done before him, to the cause which more than anything elsoled to the failure of Lord Hatherley's the House, declared that in his judgment the tain parcels are difficult of sale at present. lines on which the future procedure of the -Court is to be built ought to be clearly laid down in the Bill itself, and that nothing should | be delegated to any extra Parliamentary authority except the duty of filling up details in accordance with principles definitely indicated admitted on all hands that the schedule does It leaves unsettled the very first principles and fundamental rules of pleading to be observed, ing a word of it to fill it up in such a way as to reproduce the essence either of Chancery plead. This would be in substance the same delegation of legislative power which was so much objected to in Lord Hatherley's scheme; and however difficult it may be for the House of Commons to deal with be what its framers intend it to be unless for all the broad outline at least of the procedure to be substituted for the two antagonistic | Hongkong Hotel Company's Shares-50 per | anit purchasers, delivered ex Godowns or ED BRANDIES, of Standard Strength and systems which are now in operation. In doing anything which can fairly be called detail, and satisfactory and decisive answers are given to the following questions :-I.—Is a plaintiff to have the option either of commencing proceedings by a writ, to be On Lonnon .followed after the defendant's appearance by a printed statement, or, if he prefers it, of serving both statement and writ in the first instance, and moving, it may be, for an injunction without an hour's delay? We can see no reason why it should not be open to a plaintiff to chouse the one or the other method according | ON NEW YORK .to the nature of the case which he brings before the Court. But whichever way it is determin. ed, the point ought to be settled by the On CALCOTTA, -Bank, 3 days' sight 229 schedule.

II .- Are pleadings to be "open pleadings," that is, plain statements of fact, or are they to be "issuable pleadings" in the technical sense that they are to be framed so as necessarily to lead to definite specific issues, and to be subject to the old rules of special plending by which this end is secured? This is a question of primary importance, and for many reasons we are satisfied that the Judicature Commission was right in deciding in favour of open pleading. The great value of it is, that it ensures all the facts being before the Court, and almost excludes the possibility of a saitor's cause being lost by a slip on the part, of his pleader. The objections urged against it are, that it leads sometimes to prolixity, and that it does not produce ready-made issues for a jury to decide upon. The first of thesa defects may be readily cured by punishing undue prolixity with costs, and the other by adopting the practice which has answered so well in the Divorce Court, of always trying causes on specific issues prepared by the parties, and settled in case of difference by the Court. On the other hand, the merit of " issuable pleading" is that it is thoroughly scientific, or rather was so before the Common Law Procedure Acts tampered with it, and that it does in theory at any rate necessarily lead to definite shun to travelling trader. issues. Unfortunately, these issues are too often general issues, under which juries decide upon mixed facts and law, and the scientific precision of the method is only attained by the suppression of the real facts until the hour of loong to travelling trader. trial, and by the consequent risk of failure either from surprise or from a pleader's want of skill. One more consideration which seems to us conclusive in favour of open pleadings followed by issues settled by the Courts is, that verdicts would then always resemble special verdicts, and we should escape the scandal of new trials for misdirection. It is very monstroug that when a Judge lays down the law wrongly at Nisi Prius there should in many cases be no way of correcting the error except by directing a new trial of facts which have been well and fairly tried before. So long as juries are allowed to find verdicts on general issues involving mixed fact and law, this scandal cannot be cured. With seitled issues and special verdicts, the Judge and the jury severally perform their functions, and the error of each may be separately corrected.

III .- Are defendants to be at liberty to impose on a plaintiff the costly obligation of pro- DOLIGIES granted at current rates on Maring facts which cannot honestly be disputed & rine Risks to all parts of the World. be provided for by the cohedule. We have indicated these as among the most important points to which the labours of the Committee will have to be directed-not at all as exhausting the subjects on which amendments may be called for. The whole subject of references, to which Mr. Henry Matthews specially directed attention, will need much care ly with the idea of getting the best-tribunals to prevent it from degenerating into a wholesale delegation of Judges' work to inferior bands, such as we have witnessed in the Court of Bankruptcy. The provisions for local registries are also open to the objection that they will often only substitute provincial for metropolitan agencies, that they will localize just those steps-the filing of documents and the like-in which distance does not add to cost, and that they will sever the subordinate officers of the Court-from the Judges, who ought al- styles. ways to be accessible to them. We have not, bowever, dwelt upon these matters, because there seems less fear of their being overluoked than there is of the schedule of procedure being turned out in an unworkable shape.

> PICTURES FOR THE PRINCE OF WALES AND DUKE OF EDINBURGE .- Mr. Chevalier, who accompanied the Prince of Wales to Vienna, bas brought back several sketches of important works which he has been commissioned to execute for his Royal Highness. The principal sketch is a large one representing the opening of the Exhibition. The Emperor of Austria, in . full uniform, and the beautiful Empress occupy the most prominent positions on the raised dais. Among the other Royal personages cocupying the front line are the Orown Prince and Princess of Germany, the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and the Count of Flanders. The Archduke Charles is in the act of reading TUMES, in a variety of Patterns. the address to the Emperor, and on either side of his Imperial Highness are the great nobles of Austro-Hungary and of foreign countries. The likenesses and costumes are the result of much study on the part of the artist. Mr. Chevalier has painted a sketch of the outside of the Exhibition, as seen from the Prater; also a fine view of the castle at Buda-Pesth, and a picture representing the noble staircase of the palace in which the Prince of Wales was lodged during his stay at Vienna. Mr. Oswald Brierly, who some little time ago accompanied the Duke of Edinburgh on one of his naval craises, and whose pictures at this year's Exhibition of the Water Colour Society have attracted a good deal of notice, is now painting for his Royal Highness a large picture of her Majesty's ship Galatea, which the Duke formerly commanded.

THE STUBBORN BOUT. " Bother!" was all John Clatterby said. His breath came quick, and his check was red, He flourished his elbows and looked absurd While, over and over, his "Bother" I heard, Harder and harder the follow worked. Vainly and savagely jerked; The boot balf on would dangle and flup-"Bother!" and then be bursted the strap. Redder than ever his hot cheek flamed; Harder than ever be fumed and blamed He wriggled his beel, and tugged at the leather, Till knees and shin came bumping together. " My boy," said I, in a voice like a flute, "Why not-abem! try the mate of that boot;

THE SEA. It is a general idea that the sea is a universal object of admiration. The awful power of its waves, wearing away the strongest rocks that would confine it to its old bed and dashing to pieces the most invincible armada that man launches on its waters i the smiles of its gentler scenes; the sheet and peace of quietness of its bosom, when undismiration of thousands. But not so with those who study its true nature. The poet's clothes the sea with unlovely attributes. The sea is black at night; it roars

Moab," by H. B. Tristram.

From lips afonm with cruel apray, Like some flerce, many-threated pack Of wolves who seent and choose a prey Bryant mentions "its melancholy waste; Lowell calls it "the gray old ocean." Shelley tells us of the abandoned sen When the lides change auddenly.

Dana truly calls it "the prophet of sorrow; Tennyson, looking from a lofty height, calls BATAVIA SEA AND FIRE INSURANCE it "the wrinkled sea;" and another poot looks upon it as "at eternal war with man;" and Byron speaks of the frown Of one whose bate is masked to assail. The poets are right; with all its admitted beauty there is something hateful about the sea. It is the very type and emblem of hypocrisy. There is not a wave that creeps upon its surface but would drown the stoutest swimmer, if it once clutched him in its cruel grasp: There is not a breeze that blows over it but will wreck every vessel it reaches, if the squall can only assail it unexpectedly. Its very mercies, Byron tells us, are "like the mercies of human beings during civil war." It never willingly yields up its redentless hold of the dead, nor lets go the countless treasures it has once engulphed. Neither man nor other animal that once falls into it but is instantly asphyxiated. There! is not a shore around the wide surface of earth, but that is marked by ruin and desolation. And all the action of ocean upon its neighbour, land, is to grasp and crush and tear away, that it may draw the debris into war eternally going on below. The wildest stored thereon. deserts of Asia or Africa, though haunts of the lion and tiger, are the abodes of peace compared with the fearful slaughter that ever prevails in the ocean. The single herring averages its fifty thousand eggs; these are the support of innumerable of the smaller inhabitants of ocean, while the parent-herring feeds and fattens whole tribes of cod and whiting. The cod, fattened upon the multitudinous herring, produces its millions of young, to be eaten by the larger sturgeon. Size and strength are no salvation. inhabitants. But it is mainly in the language of inspiration that we find the deepest condemns. tion of the sea. The Old Testament chiefly uses it as a type of woe and ruin. Waves of desolation roll over cities lying under the wrath of God. "A destroying storm, a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down" those with whom he is angry. When "the Lord of hosts took counsel against Tyre, he stretched out his hand over the sea," and that city became "a place of spreading of nets." The Christian's great heart is typified by the agony of mind and statement that "the waters are come in unto his soul;" and, when a nation sins and God's wrath is upon them, "the waters of a full cup are wrung out to them." The Bible contains no more vivid picture of the restless condition of the wicked than when it states that they " are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." But it is in the apocalyptic revelations of Heaven in the New Testament that undersigned Agents of above named Companies, the sea is most bitterly condemned. The for all steamer risks, subject to a brokerage of Policies at current rates, payable either hero, power of the last judgment is shown in the 15 per cent. statement that, at that time, even "the sea The "Costerling," as well as the "Globe," shall give up its dead." The brightest, clearest word-picture of our Particulars can be obtained at the Office of residence for eternity contains the blessed gospel that, in our future home, "there shall be no more sea." - Appletons' Journal.

THE "DEHESA" BRAND OF RAISINS.

The word "Dehesa," of such frequent occurrence on boxes containing Malaga raisins, has been puzzling the Boston Commercial Bulletin, which has, however, explored the mystery, and elucidates the meaning of the word, thus :- "We could find no Debesa" on the map, the gazetteer was silent, and the dictionary gave no clue. But we did no give it up, and, opportunity conveniently offering, ascertained that 'Deliesa' meant pound-not a pound avoirdupois, but a pound for stray animals, such as were, not long since, common in every New England town, except that the Spanish variety is probably larger. Now it seems that one of these 'Dehesa,' or pounds, had outlived its usefulness, and was accordingly sold to an enterprising Senor, who converted it into a vinevard. Its long occupation by sundry oxen. pigs, sheep, and mules, to say nothing of the luckless jackasses that abound in every part of Iboria, had given its soil an unusual richness, and the result was a crop of grapes of immense size, from which the largest and finest raisins were made. So the lucky Senor adopted the name for his fruit, until Dehesa raisins have become known wherever plumpuddings are eaton."

LABOURING GENTLEMEN. I make bold to say that a man who has been thoroughly well trained as a practical mechanic is really better educated, in the proper sense of the word, than one who has merely learned what are termed "the usual our Jchalin guard a supper of rice, they branches of a gentleman's education," although there is no reason why these should not be superadded to the other, or why a man should drop the refinements of social life because he has charge of a steam-engine FIHE Undersigned having been appointed instead of a set of banker's books.
